Both men had grown a shade whiter during this speech, but upon its conclusion judge Gresham replied, dispassionately:

"Connsel will please resume his seat. The Cont has heard sufficient to make up its charge." Then, turning to the jury, he rapidly delivered his charge, instructing it that under the law the verdict must be for the defendant. Indignation at being again commanded to sit down conflicted in Mr. Harrison's breast with the sense of triumph at having won a famous case, sind the combination proved too much for his Arctle coolness. He sat down to think about it.

Thus, in a little court-room, a skirmish fought so quietly and so quickly that not more than a dozen men noted anything unusual began a personal quarrel that has already made considerable plotical history and is likely to furnish as much more in the future. The battle occurred over the roome, what celebrated Brownice higher care in January, 1870, when Judge Gresham sat upon the United States District bench and Benjamin Harrison was a careating atternative, in his estimation, are simply attorneys, in his estimation, are simply attorneys, entirely regardless of their standing or that of their clients. More than one prominent lawyer has of his family and personal friends. Thus, suffered a humiliating sense of wounded dignity from his curt and deceive orders. It is related that upon one occasion Thomas A. Hendricks, at that time easily the leader of the Indiana lar and the machine and lorder had taken his class as the party favorite. Then came the death of Carfield, the elevation of Arthur and a new distribution all most prominent political figure in the ground. National Democracy, had prepared the forces beaped honors upon his head, every sic effort of his life for delivery in Judge Gresham's court. He had no more than Harr Greslam's court. He had no more than fairly launched it when quietly and in a matter-of-fact way he was told to sit down, as the Court had reached its conclusion. Benjamin Harrison had suffered from this sort of thing and had determined to seize the first opportunity to make a stand for his rights. umph of winning his suit soon wore off, the humiliation of his failure to maintain his rights continued to rankle and, as always happens in such cases, every new contact of the two men served to increase the antagonism.

II.

The encounter in the court-room precipitated and intensified in a personal way a growing political sntagonism. It was impossible in the nature of things that two men of nearly the same age, with the same ambition, owing allegiance to the same and the same terms of the pactice of law and began at once to the party, possessed of certain high sublines and yet so diametrically opposed in character and methods, should dwell together in harmony in one State.

His independence was as uncomposition may be self-the fit of the rank of the fit of the rank of the fit of the rank of the rank of the proposition of the classical state of the party portfolio by Arthur, and later was towel into safe harbor on the circuit bench, while Harrison was retired to private life when his term expired in 1886. He returned to the pactice of law and began at once to straighten out his relations with the State politicians. A Farm Hand Becomes Insane and Com-

PITTSTON, Fa., July 10.-A shocking murder occurred yesterday on the Palmerton farm, near Barboursville. Sylvanus l'almerton, a prosperous farmer, was beaten to denth with a hou by one of his nired men, Albert Cummings. The murderer, it is said, had been subject to spells of insanity for some time past, but they were usually very mild, and no cause for alarm was felt either by l'almerton or his family, with whom Cumming boarded. Yesterday he was seized with one of these fits and became a raving maniae. In this combition he entered the house and threatened the lives of the house and threatened the lives of the family. The family fied to places of safety. Paimerton then sinted to places of safety. Paimerton then sinted to alarm some neighbors, and on the way picked up a loc. Chromings overtook him, and the two had a tusele on the highway, during which the hoc-handle was broken. The mannar unfortunately secured the end to which was attached the steel hade, and with this he beat Paimerton on the head until he was dead. Leaving the dead body in the road Chromings they went to a barn, and locking himself in attempted suicide by hanning, but several neighbors forced an entrance just in time to rescue him. He was conveyed to jail.
